

The Home Office Helper

Volume 1, Issue 26, May, 2006

Unlimited Voice?

If you already have a broadband Internet connection (cable or DSL), maybe it's time to consider a broadband telephone service as well. We take a look at iConnectHere's iCall Unlimited—$29.99 per month, lots of features!

More Details

Hot Hardware!

You've read about it, now build your home wireless network on the new 802.11n standard with Linksys' Wireless-N Broadband Router (WRT300N). Get the particulars on this new, fast device here.

More Details

The Naked Corporation

The corporate world has changed immensely with the new focus on the information that must be supplied to the government, share holders, employees and partners. The Naked Corporation describes how this change has shifted power within the corporate world and how some companies are using this change to their advantage.

More Details

Tech Spotlight

Some of the new Wi-Fi equipment for home networks now states that it is 802.11n. What is 802.11n? Is it faster/smarter than 802.11g? Find out here.

More Details

A Wi-Fi Phone?

You bet! Check out Zully's WIP2 Wi-Fi VoIP phone. It uses 802.11b wireless technology and SIP (Session Initiation Protocol) to communicate with any SIP-based VoIP server (check with your VoIP service provider to ensure that the phone works with your service). It's not cheap—but it has a lot to offer. Find out more here.

More Details

Hot Finds!

It's a networked storage device, no, it's a router, no, it's a printer server—actually it's all of the above. Take a look at our "Hot Find" for May—Freecom's FSG-3 Storage Gateway. A device that can do a lot for at a competitive price!

More Details

To remove your name from our mailing list, please click here.

Questions or comments? E-mail us at dmielke@homeofficereports.com or call 972-529-9719.

<http://www.homeofficereports.com>